ORANGUTANGS IN DANGER

Of all the great apes, the orangutan is the one which has the most specialized lifestyle. Unlike gorillas or chimpanzees, orangutans are arboreal, which means they live in nests in the trees almost never coming down to the ground. Deforestation in Borneo and Sumatra, the Indonesian islands where they have made their home, is particularly bad news for wild orangutans. Why are they cutting down so much of the orangutans' natural habitat? It's a story which is happening all over the world: there are too many factories that need wood to make homes, furniture and paper, and farmers who need land to plant crops. Indonesia is not the only place where wild animals are losing their habitat because of the farming of palm oil, which is used in manufactured foods and cosmetics. As soon as the trees are removed, the land becomes palm plantation. Many charities are now rescuing orangutans which have lost their habitat. Is it already too late? Only time will tell.
