Question 23 (Question ID: 9-160937)

CLIMATE and CHARACTER

Does the climate of a country really affect the behavior of the people who live in it and help to create its culture? Have you ever heard of people from hot countries being described as "warm and friendly" while those from places with low temperatures and grey climates are sometimes called "cold and distant"?

The people who live in colder climates tend Q23.1..... spend much more time at home Q23.2..... television or wondering what color to paint the living room. As a result of their being "shut in" at home for most of their lives, perhaps they also develop Q23.3..... to match. Maybe they tend to be Q23.4..... expressive in their everyday lives.

In Q23.5....., we see that people who live in warm and sunny countries spend much more time outdoors. In squares all over southern Europe, for example, we can see hundreds of people during the day drinking coffee in cafés and chatting. It certainly seems as if climate affects behavior, although you have to be careful not to generalise too much.

Q23.2. A. looking B. viewing C. seeing D. watching

Q23.3. A. economic status B. personalities C. health D. qualities

Q23.4. A. less B. little C. few D. least

Q23.5. A. opposite B. addition C. similarity D. contrast

One, two, three, four...

There have been many different number systems in the world. A long time ago the Babylonians counted in 60s and today computers count in 2s - using only 1 and 0. We call this 2-number system the binary system. Most systems, however, count in 10s. This is because we have 10 fingers. We call this system the decimal system from "decem", the Latin word for 10.

The Romans used letters like I, V, X and C to count in 10s but these are not very easy to use. The numbers most people use today come from India. We think they were invented by the Hindu people there. In the Hindu system, the place of each number is important. For example, 832 is a different number to 238 or 382. The Hindu system was also used by the Arabs, and we now call them Arabic numbers. In about the 12th century an Italian called Leonardo Fibonacci wrote a book about Arabic numbers, and people all over Europe began using these numbers.

We do not know who invented the decimal point, but we know that in 1585 a man called Simon Stevin wrote a book about the decimal point. The book was called "The Tenth". Before we knew about the decimal point, we had to see fractions like $1/2$ and $3/4$ when we talked about numbers smaller than 1.
