Cindy Chen: I go to school to get experience. My father works for a multinational company, and we have already been to four different countries. Consequently, I have studied in different schools. People say that getting international experience will give you a proper academical education. Because of this, my parents sent me to these schools so that I could learn from different cultures and languages.

Austin Allen: Because I have to and it's the law. I don't like the school. It's a headache for me. I'm tired of answering tests and being asked silly questions about things you'll never see in real life! I just come to school in order to get a diploma since I need it to be a policeman. Although I have good grades to not disappoint my parents.

Vince Aiken: School? It is fun. I've got plenty of Friends here. I think school is the best place to meet new people and make friends. Definitely friendship is the way to make it through high school. There's no point on stressing yourself about overachieving excellency for fear of failure. Just relax, enjoy, be yourself and as a result you'll cherish your high school memories.

Rafika Alami: Boring? Maybe but without education a lifetime unemployed will be more boring. I certainly come to this school so as to get a good education. And I study a lot to become Student Council therefore starting my career in politics. My dream is to become a Congress woman just like Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez.
