Helping at the Animal Shelter

by Alice Smith

My parents told me that I had to spend at least three days per week helping others during my summer holiday. So we talked about the different groups that I could help, like poor people, orphan children and rescued animals. In the end, I chose to volunteer at an animal shelter, a place that tries to find new families for homeless cats and dogs.

I had chosen the animal shelter because I thought I would be able to play with the animals, but it seemed like all I did was clean! So after a week of hard work, I finally asked if I could spend some time with the animals. But they told me I could not touch them until I took a safety class. Not only that, but I had to wait for a whole month before taking the course because it is only offered in July. At first, this news made me sad, but then I realised that keeping the shelter clean was actually one of the most important jobs. Without a clean area to live in, the animals could get sick or hurt and then no one would be able to adopt them. I remembered what my mother had said, that I needed to help others. Washing floors might not seem like much, but I knew I was doing a job that could make a big difference in the life of a rescued cat or dog.

I worked very hard over the summer. I eventually took the safety course, but I was not interested in playing with the animals by then. I knew that the really important work was keeping them safe, healthy and ready for a new home.

14. What did Alice have to do during her summer holiday?
A. Get a job
B. Help others
C. Take extra classes

15. Alice decided to volunteer with _____
A. people who don't have money.
B. children that have no parents.
C. animals that have no homes.

16. Why was Alice's first week at the shelter surprising?
A. The shelter was not very clean
B. She couldn't play with the animals
C. The work was too hard

17. What did Alice think about washing floors?
A. It was helpful to the animals
B. It was hard work
C. It was not fun

18. Alice realises cleaning is important because _____
A. the animals can get dirty.
B. the animals will stay healthy.
C. the animals can't clean themselves.
