Today's talk is about unusual homes. All around the world are different kinds of homes. Some of them may surprise you. Coober Pedy, Australia, is a mining town. All the mining created a lot of caves. Many people actually live in these caves under the ground. They live in the caves because it's very hot in Coober Pedy. But underground, it's nice and cool. The cave homes are just like regular homes. The people have furniture and appliances, just like we do.

How about living inside a volcano? Aogashima is an island near Tokyo, Japan. It's also a volcano. It's not dangerous to live on the island. About 200 people live on Aogashima. The hot gases from the volcano give the residents free heating, hot water, and steam for cooking.

Not everyone in the world lives on or under the ground. The Korowai people live high up above the ground. They live in tree houses, in the West Papuan rain forest of Indonesia. The Korowai build tree houses 8 to 12 meters high (and sometimes higher). Whole families and their pets live together in one tree house. High in their tree house they don't have to worry about mosquitoes or floods. And they have a great view!
