Unusual Jobs in the UAE

Many jobs today are very different from conventional jobs. These jobs may not have existed

50 years ago and although they might seem easy, in reality these unusual jobs require special skills and qualities.

A Voice-over artist – If you wanted to be a voice-over artist, you would not need a degree. Being a confident and expressive speaker with clear pronunciation is the most essential criteria, as is experience. Most voice-over artists start off doing small one-off jobs for local businesses and radio, with some working part-time alongside a regular job. Openings for voice-over artists could be in different languages, and, as you get lots of experience and contacts in the industry, eventually you could do voice-overs for TV and movies, and maybe even move into working as a TV or radio presenter.

B Mystery shopper – If you became a mystery shopper, you would need to inspect the services provided by shops, for example checking if the sales staff are helpful and polite, and that they can answer any of your questions about the product options. You would also need to look at the surroundings to see if they meet the shop owner's or company's standards. Mystery shoppers should, understandably, like shopping, be good communicators and have an eye for detail. A good memory is also important as you need to remember your experience well enough to be able to write a detailed report for your client after the shop visit.

C Storyteller – Storytelling is part of the UAE's heritage. Despite the move towards technology-based entertainment, traditional storytellers are still in demand. Although most storytellers work voluntarily, for example by reading stories to children in hospitals, some are paid good rates to read to students in schools and nurseries. If you decided to become a storyteller, you would need to do more than just read the lines on a page; storytellers need to be able to make the story come alive by changing the sound and pitch of their voice.

D Personal shopper – Personal shoppers help busy, fashion-conscious and wealthy clients to find what they need, whether it is a gift, an outfit for a sophisticated wedding or a new set of designer accessories. Most personal shoppers work in exclusive department stores; however, some work as freelancers or even have their own personal shopping consultancy online. Working so closely with clients means that you need to be reliable, have good people skills and be able to remember your client's tastes so that you know exactly what they will like. Sometimes the hours can be unpredictable as clients may need something in a short amount of time. Working with demanding clients can be difficult, but if you love shopping, then this is definitely the job for you!
