

Mark: Hello, Jenny. What are you doing here?

Jenny: Mark! Hello! This is my daughter, Sarah. It's the school holidays so we're shopping now - we're not sure what to do after that.

Mark: Well, there's a show for children this afternoon in the library where I work.

Jenny: Oh? What time is the show?

Mark: It starts at two and finishes at three thirty. It's only quarter past one now. What about that?

Jenny: How much is a ticket?

Mark: Well, it's one pound fifty for adults and seventy-five pence for children. Programmes are twenty-five pence.

Jenny: And does your library do a reading course in the holidays?

Mark: Yes, and if children under ten, like Sarah, read four books in six weeks, we give them something to take home.

Jenny: What, like, a book?

Mark: Well, this year it's a pen but sometimes it's a book or a school bag. Meet me after the show and I'll tell you what to do.

Jenny: Thanks. See you later then.
