Social networks are an essential source of information for people of all ages. To keep in touch with friends, know about breaking news, or even buy and sell things.

The company Bulletin Board System (BBS), created the first social network in 1974. Its objective was to inform company employees about meetings. Years later, people used a webpage called Blogger to share experiences in a blog. In 2002, Friendster appeared, and people could play online games. Two years later, in 2004, Facebook was created. Mark Zuckerberg designed the website when he was studying at Harvard University in the USA. It was for college students, but everybody started to use it. People published photos, comments and personal information. Facebook now has two billion users from all around the world.

One year after Facebook, YouTube was part of the internet, but it had a different goal than Facebook. It was a website to share videos. In 2006, Twitter started as a microblogging website, and people could only write 140 characters.
