I remember [1] _____ (read) an article about Kerala fifteen years ago, and I've been meaning [2] _____ (visit) ever since. The government has tried [3] _____ (improve) people's quality of life through various measures, such as land reform. In the 1960s, it stopped [4] _____ (allow) landlords to charge rent to farmers. This meant [5] _____ (give) the land back to the people who worked on it. At the same time, the government started [6] _____ (invest) in education. So poor people in Kerala have benefited financially and are now better educated. But no system is perfect, I regret [7] _____ (say). The problem in Kerala is that the economy is still based on agriculture. Most students who graduate with a degree won't want to work in the fields. So although they may prefer [8] _____ (live) in Kerala, a lot of young people are trying [9] _____ (move) to more developed parts of India to find decent jobs.
