A. Read the article, then mark (✓) the five things that it mentions. There are two extra things that you don't need to choose

Star Wars – a modern fairy tale?

The Star Wars films are some of the most popular science fiction movies in film history. The original movie, which came out in 1977, was thrilling, with amazing special effects. The new movies, which will be shown over the next few years, have passionate fans. Despite the critics, Star Wars will continue making a lot of money. But what makes Star Wars movies so successful? One possible reason is that they are like the fairy tales we enjoyed when we were children.

Many of them have the same kind of plot and characters as Star Wars, even though the setting is completely different. In fact, Harrison Ford, who played the character Han Solo, once said that he thought Star Wars was more like a fairy tale than a science fiction movie.

First, let's start with the characters. In fairy tales, it's common for the hero to be alone in the world. They might have no mother or father, and they might not know who they really are. But, by the end of the story, they will have become an important person – perhaps a prince or princess.

In fairy tales, a common plot is for the hero to go on a journey. They leave home, which they can never return to, and travel far, finding out who they really are. On the way, they usually meet people who teach them something important – like a fairy godmother, or the character of Obi-Wan Kenobi in Star Wars. Often, these friendly characters are old and have magical powers. They are like a parent to the hero.
Most fairy tales have a villain, and it's very easy to know who they are. This is no different in Star Wars. The villains are the people who wear black, and the heroes wear white! In some famous fairy tales, like Snow White or Cinderella, the villain is one of the hero's parents. If you know the plot of Star Wars well enough, you will know that one villain is actually the hero's father.

Finally, all fairy tales have a happy ending, and this is certainly true of the Star Wars movies. We know that the heroes will win, the villains will be destroyed, and everyone will live happily ever after.
