Have you ever watched blind skiing? It's super exciting for spectators, but extremely difficult for competitors. Imagine skiing downhill at 112 kilometers (70 miles) an hour—wearing a blindfold! It takes courage. So how does it work? The blind skier skis with a sighted skier who guides them down the slope. The two skiers travel at speed just a few feet apart. A tiny mistake can lead to a crash. Jade Etherington, a skier who has just 5 percent vision, explains how she feels about the danger: "I've had many crashes. But never too bad . . . In a way it's a help if you can't see it coming—you're more relaxed."

How does blind skiing work?

Another inspirational athlete is 18-year-old Brazilian skateboarder Felipe Nunes. Since Felipe lost his legs in an accident at the age of six, he has worked to achieve his dream of becoming a skateboarder. Now he competes at the highest level, and videos of his cool moves are an internet sensation. In everyday life, he doesn't use a wheelchair—he goes everywhere on his skateboard!
