|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--|
| 1. First of all, the tea is grown for three years.                                                                                                  |  |
| 2. Then it is picked by hand.                                                                                                                       |  |
| 3. After that, the tea is left to rest either outdoors or indoors.                                                                                  |  |
| 4. Next, it is put in a drying machine where it is dried for two hours. The temperature during this stage of the process should be just over 260°C. |  |
| 5. After this comes the packaging stage. The dried tea is made into teabags and the teabags are put into boxes.                                     |  |
| 6. The boxes are then packed into lorries. The lorries deliver the tea to the supermarkets.                                                         |  |
| 7. Finally, customers buy the tea when they are shopping.                                                                                           |  |
