Terence's Morning

Terence woke up and stretched under the covers. He yawned and thought about going back to sleep. Bright sun streaming in through the curtains kept his eyes open, though. Nearby, a lawnmower buzzed and rumbled. When he took a deep breath, the smell of pancakes tickled his nose. Suddenly, Terence remembered what day it was and bounced out of bed. He pawed through his dresser and then called downstairs. "Dad, where's my uniform?"

SAMPLE A

Terence probably got out of bed to —

- A go on a trip
- B make breakfast
- C play in a game
- D mow the lawn

Tortoise and Coyote

One day, Coyote was lying in the shade when Old Tortoise trundled by. "Look at you," laughed Coyote. "You are always trudging from here to there, and from there to here, so slowly that you have no time to rest."

Old Tortoise did not pause in his walking, but ever so slowly he craned his head sideways and looked at Coyote. "What need have I to rest?" His deep voice rumbled over the dusty ground. "My legs are as strong as tree trunks!"

"Your legs are very much like tree trunks!" Coyote shouted. "They are good for standing still." With that, Coyote ran around Old Tortoise, kicking dust up into Tortoise's face. "Catch me if you can, Old Tree Trunk!" And with that, Coyote ran off into the hills.

As Old Tortoise crept away, he spotted a tree oozing sticky sap and chuckled to himself. He rubbed against the tree until his shell was coated with the sticky sap. Then, he pulled in his legs and head and lay down to wait.

When Coyote returned, he found a big rock in his way. Coyote swung his leg to kick it out of the way. His leg stuck fast to the sticky rock. Angrily, Coyote kicked with his other legs. Coyote was soon completely stuck.

Old Tortoise poked his head out and spoke up. "I may be slow, but I am quick enough to catch you!" Coyote begged for his freedom. Finally Tortoise said, "I will take you to the stream and wash you off my shell." But Tortoise did nothing quickly, and Coyote was stuck to his back all day while Tortoise plodded over the dusty land to the stream.
