Subject: Summer Event

Hi All,

The social committee has decided on the company's summer event. It will be a barbecue held on July 16 at Big Bear Park. Although it will be hot, don't worry. Not only are there trees to provide shade, but we will also rent several large tents. The tent rental company will deliver them to the park, set them up, and take them down for us, so we don't need to worry about any of that.

We will need people to volunteer to help in other ways, though. Since it's a barbecue, we will need people to help cook the food. We'll also need people to hand out drinks and to help us clean up afterwards, which is expected to be a huge job! Please email us if you are interested in being a volunteer.

Questions 26-28

Dogs love to be taken on walks, and many owners enjoy taking their pets to parks, on trails, and to other outdoor areas. However, getting a bit of exercise with an animal can sometimes be frightening and even dangerous. Just ask an American man named Richard Wilbanks. In November 2020, the 74-year-old man was walking his puppy, which he named Gunner, around a pond near his home in Florida. All of a sudden, a small alligator sped out from the pond and grabbed the little dog in its jaws.

Gunner's owner responded quickly. He went into the pond, putting his head under the water in search of his pet. The elderly man was able to grab hold of the wild animal and force its mouth open with his fingers. Not only that, but Wilbanks also accomplished the rescue without even dropping the cigar he had in his mouth while walking Gunner! Luckily, Gunner suffered only minor injuries in the stomach from alligator bites. Despite the terrible incident, Wilbanks doesn't want the alligator to be caught and killed.

Subject: New Year Meeting

Hi All,

I attended a photography conference on the weekend and got to talk to one of the speakers there. Her name is Alice Murray and she has a lot of knowledge of new photography techniques. I have invited her to come to our New Year Meeting, which means I need to make a last-minute change to the schedule. I'd like to replace Suzanne's discussion of staff promotions with Alice's presentation on new techniques. That will lead nicely into our discussion on equipment.

As we have a special guest, I also think it would be a nice idea to go out for lunch rather than do what we originally planned. I've asked my secretary to book a table at Silvano's Restaurant. They have some excellent lunch specials that I'm sure everyone will enjoy.

Finally, I'd just like to say a big thank you to you all for your hard work last year. It was our most profitable year on record, and I have every faith that the next one will be even better.

See you all at Hotel East tomorrow.

Regards,
Simon

Questions 32-35

When music fans think of the British rock band Queen, they usually think of Freddie Mercury. Mercury was the lead singer of the band, and he is considered to be one of the best singers to have ever lived. However, the person responsible for forming the band was Brian May, the guitar player. May, Mercury, and drummer Roger Taylor first played as Queen in 1970. The next year, John Deacon joined the band as their bassist.

Queen became known for its different and creative styles of music. Their sound was an interesting mixture of powerful rock music, catchy melodies, and many dramatic and artistic elements. Their songs were often longer than most others on the radio at that time. The group became hugely popular in the 1970s, and this success carried on into the 1980s.

The last time Mercury performed on stage with the other members of Queen was in 1986, although the band continued to release records afterwards. Mercury's health began declining, and in 1987, he was told he had AIDS. He kept his disease secret from the public for years. Then, on November 23, 1991, Mercury told the world he had AIDS. Less than a day after that, he died at the age of 45. After his death, the band stopped performing in front of audiences for many years. Then, in 2005, they began touring again with another singer.
