Ashley: Hello Ross.

Ross: Oh hi, Ashley! What are you reading about?

Ashley: A new reality TV programme that 1 was shown/showed/is shown last night.

Ross: A reality TV programme? I thought that 2 tabloid/broadsheet/blog newspapers wrote about politics and stuff like that.

Ashley: Well, you're half right. Reality TV programmes 3 usually watch/are usually watching/are usually watched by people who read 4 magazines/headlines/tabloids but this is an interesting article. It wasn't a normal reality show. It was Big Brother for children aged eight to eleven.

Ross: You're joking! What 5 programme/channel/podcast was that on?

Ashley: Channel 4. It says here that it was awful.

Ross: Why? Because nothing happened?

Ashley: No. Too much happened. The children 6 were left/were leaving/left on their own to do what they wanted. They weren't happy!

Ross: Oh dear! Why did anyone think that was a good idea?

Ashley: Well, so many different reality shows 7 have shown/have been shown/have been showing now already so they are desperately trying to find something new.

Ross: Hang on! That's just given me an idea. I've got my own 8 report/blog/channel. It 9 has been read/has read/has been reading by eighty-four people so far! My next article will be about new ideas for reality TV shows.

Ashley: Great! Give me the address and I'll be the first to read
