What's a Film Without Popcorn?

Popcorn was always connected with films. But when did this connection start?

Popcorn became a popular snack in North America in the 19th century. People bought popcorn in circuses or fairs. Popcorn smelled so good that many people liked it.

In 1930, people started to go to the cinema, but the owners of the cinemas didn't sell popcorn at the cinema rooms, because they wanted to protect the expensive carpets. Salesmen sold popcorn on the streets and people loved it! As a lot of people ate popcorn when they went to the cinema, the owners saw that it was a good idea to sell it inside the cinemas. At the beginning, the salesmen sold popcorn inside, but then the owners began to sell it themselves and they made a lot of money out of it, because popcorn was cheap and quick to make! There was almost no person who didn't eat popcorn!

In 2000, many people stopped going to the cinema because they watched movies at home on the Internet. But the popcorn industry didn't stop growing.

Nowadays, people still buy popcorn at the movies. Or they make it at home and watch series or films on Internet platforms, such as Netflix. Do you eat popcorn when you go to the cinema? Or do you make it at home?
