When I travel to another country, I always try to learn the language so I can Select an option with local people. I don't just study words and grammar, but Select an option too, so people can understand me. However, this isn't always possible, especially if you're just going somewhere for a short holiday. It's amazing how much you can express with gestures and Select an option expressions. Looking somebody in the Select an option and Select an option your eyebrows is important because it shows you're paying attention to what they're saying. If you don't understand someone, stay calm and don't raise your Select an option – there are better ways to show you don't understand. One Select an option is to simply Select an option your shoulders in a friendly way and smile. Be careful with some gestures though as they can mean different things around the world. If you Select an option your head in Bulgaria, it actually means 'yes'. And in some countries it's rude to point a Select an option at other people.
