PENGUINS INTRIGUE SCIENTISTS

Do penguins fall over backwards when watching aircraft fly overhead?	0	NO
British scientists are sometimes travelling to South Georgia in the south	00	SOMETIMES
Atlantic to find answers to that and other questions from a study of the island's	1
4000,000 King Penguins. Scientists have been sceptical about reports of penguins	2
falling over backwards to watch at the aircraft flying above them. But a senior	3
officer on the British navy ship HMS Endurance, which is taking the scientific	4
team to South Georgia, said he believed to the reports.	5
"The penguins always look up at the helicopters and follow for them all the way	6
until they will fall over backwards,"	7
Stuart Matthew, the ship's operations officer, told to the Daily Telegraph.	8
Dr. Richard Stone of the British Antarctic Survey told Reuters that scientists were	9
concerned that low-flying aircraft could to cause stress among penguins and	10 affect their breeding performance.
