PENGUINS INTRIGUE SCIENTISTS

Do penguins fall over backwards when watching aircraft fly overhead?	0	NO
British scientists are sometimes travelling to South Georgia in the south Atlantic to find answers to that and other questions from a study of the island's 4000,000 King Penguins. Scientists have been sceptical about reports of penguins falling over backwards to watch at the aircraft flying above them. But a senior officer on the British navy ship HMS Endurance, which is taking the scientific team to South Georgia, said he believed to the reports.	00	SOMETIMES
"The penguins always look up at the helicopters and follow for them all the way until they will fall over backwards,"	1
Stuart Matthew, the ship's operations officer, told to the Daily Telegraph.	2
Dr. Richard Stone of the British Antarctic Survey told Reuters that scientists were concerned that low-flying aircraft could to cause stress among penguins and affect their breeding performance.	3
