Section 5 – Language Focus

a. Describing people

Describing people typically contains information about their physical features, personality traits, their current condition or facts; such as job, age, hobby, and regular activities; or what they usually do. Look at the following examples:

1. His name is Made.
2. He uses a crutch.
3. Made likes playing basketball.
4. They like playing badminton.

When we talk about an activity that is done regularly, we can use words to show action (he wears ...) or feeling (he likes ...). These types of words are called verbs. The form of verbs can change depending on who is being described.

In example number 3, we use likes because the subject is singular and in example 4 we use like because the subject is plural. We can use information about regular activities and facts to describe someone.
