How to lose a million pounds

When Mick Cornett was elected Mayor of Oklahoma City, things were improving for the city. It was a good place to get a job and, according to some magazines, the best city to start a business. There had also been plenty of development like new sports stadiums and arts centres designed to improve people's quality of life. However, Oklahoma City had a problem: its residents were some of the most obese in the USA.

So why were the citizens of Oklahoma City so overweight? Obviously, a poor diet was one cause, but another was the way the city was designed. Oklahoma City is a great place for drivers; there are wide roads and heavy traffic isn't really a problem even at rush hour. So residents were getting in their cars and driving everywhere. This meant that developers didn't have to build new pavements, so Oklahoma City had schools, libraries and sports centres, but no pavements to connect them.

In 2007, Mick came up with an ambitious plan for the city itself to go on a diet and, hopefully, lose a million pounds*. He set up a website and Oklahoma residents signed up. His message caught the attention of the media, and, more importantly, the city's residents. Every pound they lost through diet and exercise was added up on the website. The next step was to redesign the city for the people who lived there, rather than their cars. Hundreds of miles of new pavements were built along with new developments that were pedestrian-friendly. Oklahoma City was now somewhere you could walk around.

At the beginning of 2012, Oklahoma City residents lost their millionth pound, but Mick hasn't finished yet. He still believes that there's lots of work to do in his own city and in the rest of the world. In countries like the UK and the USA over one third of the population are obese and the problem is now spreading to countries like Australia and New Zealand, too. There is hope, though and walking might just be the answer. So why not leave the car at home today and walk to work instead? Remember – it's not about the destination, it's about the journey you take to get there.
