Indonesia earthquake: Many schoolchildren killed in building collapses

Many of those killed and injured in a major earthquake on the Indonesian island of Java were children who were at school when it hit, rescuers say.

Aprizal Mulyadi, 14, said he was trapped after "the room collapsed and my legs were buried under the rubble".

He said he was pulled to safety by his friend Zulfikar, who then later died after himself becoming trapped.

The local administration in Cianjur says the death toll has risen to 252 people.

Earlier on Tuesday Indonesia's national disaster response agency, the BNPB, put confirmed deaths at 103 with 31 people missing – but warned this number was likely to rise.

The 5.6 magnitude quake struck a mountainous region on Monday, causing landslides that buried entire villages near the West Java town of Cianjur.

Victims were crushed or trapped after walls and roofs caved in. "It all happened so fast," Aprizal told AFP news agency.

A representative of the National Search and Rescue Agency also confirmed that many of the dead were young people.

"Most of the casualties are children because at 1pm, they were still at school," said Henri Alfiandi.
