Rosa Louise McCauley Parks (February 4, 1913 – October 24, 2005) was an African-American civil rights activist. Ms. Parks was a 42-year-old worker in Montgomery, Alabama when she caught a bus on December 1, 1955. Shortly after she sat down, a white man got on the bus and had to stand. At that time, there were segregation laws which required African-Americans to make room for white passengers. Ms. Parks refused to comply with the bus driver's demands for her to move. She said, "No, I am tired of being treated like a second-class citizen". She was convicted of breaking the law. Therefore, she had to go to jail for one day and was fined $10. However, her act of bravery sparked a famous bus boycott that lasted 381 days. It also led to the end of segregation laws throughout America's South. In 1956, the Supreme Court declared that African Americans could sit wherever they wanted. In 1964, the Civil Rights Act banned all racial discrimination in public places. The mayor of Detroit praised her courage and strength. He said she was a symbol of the civil rights movement. He also said: "Just by a simple act of sitting down she stood up for so many people". Ms. Parks is called the mother of America's civil rights movement. In 1999, the US Senate described her as a living icon for freedom in America.

Read the following passage. Match the types of shoppers (A-E) to the suitable information.

Some people love shopping, some hate it, some do it quickly and some enjoy it. Overall, there are five common types of shoppers.

A. The bargain hunter

Bargain hunters are not after a particular item, nor are they loyal to a specific brand. Price is their most important purchasing factor. They don't like to waste money, so they always shop around to find the best deal they can. They also look for special offers in the shops and online.

B. The well-informed scholar

They need to find out everything about a product before they buy it. They read reviews in magazines and blogs to check what people say, scan general pricing information and even talk to friends who own the products before visiting the store.

C. The impulse buyer

Unlike the well-informed scholars, the impulse shoppers make unplanned purchases based on items that attract them in the moment. They're not interested in all the details about a product. When they see something they like, they buy it. Maybe they don't need it, it's just so cute.

D. The loyalist

Shopping is easy for them because they always buy the same thing from the same brands. They know which shops they like; they only go to those stores and make regular purchases. The sales assistants might even know them by name and have a good relationship with them.

E. The man on the mission

Before entering the store, they already have a note of what to buy, and they stick to that. Shopping is not something they enjoy. They want the fastest and smoothest shopping experience, so they can leave the store and get back to doing other things. They might even place the order online and pick up the same day.
