Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the answer to each of the question.

On 20 January 2009, Barack Obama became the first black president of the US. This was a proud day for African Americans, who had suffered socio-political oppression for most of the 20th century and long before that. Yet there is one area of American life where they have always had a big say: music. Without their valuable contribution, many types of modern music would possibly never have existed.

About 300 years ago, over half a million people were brought by force from West Africa to work as slaves in the US. These unlucky men and women came with their own traditions and cultures, which, together with their native music, were totally new to white European colonists. The banjo, a type of guitar that the slaves brought with them from their homeland, quickly became popular in the new country. White performers began to put make-up on their faces to pretend to be black as they played the banjo in front of enthusiastic white audiences. This spectacle, called 'blackface', was popular for over 100 years until it was banned in the 1960s because people realised it encouraged racism.

Work songs, which the slaves sang as they worked in the fields or built the railways, also had a profound musical impact. Many of these songs helped the slaves to maintain pride and solidarity, and to carry on in times of hardship. When African Americans began to convert to Christianity, these songs provided the basis for the famous spirituals and gospel music sung in churches for black people. Work songs also played an important role in the development of blues and jazz, and later soul and hip hop today.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the answer to each of the question.

Although bear-like, koalas are not bears. They are mammals, so feed their young milk and are marsupials, which means that their babies are born immature and they develop further in the safety of a pouch. They are tree-dwelling, herbivorous marsupials, which average about 9kg in weight and live on gum leaves. Their fur is thick and usually ash grey with a tinge of brown in places. Koalas in the southern parts of Australia are considerably larger and have thicker fur than those in the north. This is thought to be an adaptation to keep them warm in the colder southern winters.

Younger breeding females usually give birth to one joey each year, depending on a range of factors. The joey stays in its mother's pouch for about 6 or 7 months, drinking only milk. After venturing out of the pouch, the joey rides on its mother's abdomen or back, although it continues to return to her pouch for milk until it is too big to fit inside. The joey leaves its mother's home range between 1 and 3 years old, depending on when the mother has her next joey.

Koalas are mostly nocturnal. They sleep for part of the night and also sometimes move about in the daytime. They often sleep for up to 18-20 hours each day. There is a myth that koalas sleep a lot because they 'get drunk' on gum leaves. However, most of their time is spent sleeping because it requires a lot of energy to digest their toxic, fibrous, low-nutrition diet and sleeping is the best way to conserve energy.

The koala gets its name from an ancient Aboriginal word meaning "no drink" because it receives over 90% of its hydration from the eucalyptus leaves (also known as gum leaves) it eats, and only drinks when ill or times when there is not enough moisture in the leaves i.e. during droughts, etc.

Question 44: Which of the following is the best title for the passage?

A. Koalas' Breeding.

B. The Origin Of The Koala's Name And Its Eating Habits.

C. Koalas Are Mammals, Not Bears.

D. The Real Story About Koalas.

Question 45: According to paragraph 2, how do younger mother koalas usually breed ?

A. They give birth to one joey biannually.

B. They give birth to one offspring annually.

C. They don't give birth until the females reach 6 or 7 months.

D. They don't breed during the day.

A. sleepy all day and night B. awake at daytime

C. sleepy at night D. active at night

Question 49: Which of the following is NOT true according to the passage ?

A. Koalas drink a lot of water during the meals in order to digest gum leaves.

B. Koalas spend up to twenty hours sleeping each day.

C. Koalas do not drink water normally.

D. Koalas are herbivorous and tree-dwelling.

Question 50: Which of the following can be inferred from the passage?

A. Koalas get drunk on gum leaves.

B. Koalas are considered as diurnal mammals.

C. Koalas are vegetarian.

D. There are more koalas in the southern parts of Australia than those in the north.
