Anyone who ¹ (buy) a drone in the UK in future ² (have to) register it and take a safety test, according to new rules that the government is developing to prevent collisions with other aircraft. This year, ministers ³ also (propose) rules that include punishment for anyone who operates a drone in no-fly zones near airports and prisons.

More rules have become necessary as drones have become increasingly popular. Experts predict that the industry ⁴ (increase) in value to £100 billion by the middle of the next decade.

Soon, more and more transport providers, emergency services and conservation groups ⁵ (use) drones to improve their services and respond to incidents.

There is also the possibility that online shops ⁶ (make) commercial deliveries using drones in the near future. These drones may require specially licensed pilots. Hopefully, this and other rules ⁷ (help) keep the public safe – in the air and on the ground.
