We use have to + base form when we talk about something that we must do.

It's late. We have to leave now.

We often use have to when we give directions to someone.

You have to go left at the traffic lights.

The past simple form is had to + base form.

They had to go over the bridge.

When giving directions, we often use the imperative. This is a more direct form of giving an instruction than have to.

Turn left. Go over the bridge.

I. Read and circle the correct answer.

II. Read and guess. Where place is it?

III. Look at the map. Write four directions to explain how to get to the station.
