Vocabulary 1

Look at the text from the video below and then match the vocabulary to the correct definition.

Prepare for feasts, treats and temptations as you take in Germany's beautiful scenery, fascinating cities and culture and romantic palaces. Germany is blessed with beautiful and diverse natural landscapes from the dune-covered coasts of the north, down to the moody forests, river valleys and vineyards of the centre and of course the splendour of the Alps in the south where beautiful natural views are only improved by spectacular castles.

The glamour and grit of Berlin are great for fans of vibrant culture, edgy architecture and fabulous food. There's haute cuisine in a former brewery, all night parties in power stations and world-class art in a World War II bunker.

If you're looking for alpine flavour, Munich has it in spades but the Bavarian capital also has plenty of cheerful beer gardens and open spaces to while away a sunny day. The 19th century romantics found beauty and inspiration in Germany's oldest university town. Generations of students have attended lectures, sung with beer steins in their hands and carved their names into tavern tables.

In mist, snow or shine the deep, dark black forest is just beautiful. If it's back-to-nature moments you're after then this slice of south-western Germany is the place to go.

East is Best

Head to Dresden and Leipzig for a trip to remember

- A. ____ Despite becoming a single country in October 1990, the east and west sides of Germany still offer differing experiences for the excited traveller. In fact, as time passes, the number of people choosing to visit the east increases and the significant treasures that part of the country possesses are a delight for those who decide to take a chance.
- B. ____ Dresden is an excellent place to start a trip in eastern Germany. Nicknamed "Jewel Box" due to the Baroque architecture that is present in the centre of the city, it is the capital of Saxony and was previously a residence for royalty.
- C. ____ The unfortunate reality is that most of the historic city centre had to be rebuilt after it was bombed heavily in 1945. Estimates suggest that 85% of the centre was destroyed. However, take time to visit a symbol of Dresden's recovery and discover how the city bounced back. The Frauenkirche (The Church of our Lady) was completely ruined in the World War II bombing but was slowly rebuilt using as much of the original material as possible. If you visit the church, you can notice that the darker stones are the ones from the original building.
- D. ____ While wandering the streets of historic Dresden, take time to try Dresdner Christollen, a fruitcake that is a delicious combination of butter, almonds and raisins soaked in rum. The traditional recipe is so well-loved that the name is protected by law and must include an exact distribution of ingredients.
- E. ____ A one-hour drive from Dresden takes you to Leipzig, an intriguing city that has recently blossomed into a must-visit destination. Due to the poverty suffered by the East after the war, the money needed to redevelop Leipzig did not arrive until later than other cities. The reunified Germany did not see a space for heavy industry, and this had previously been Leipzig's main source of employment.
- F. ____ From 1990-2000 over 100,000 people left Leipzig due to increased unemployment. However, in 2000 elaborate plans were launched to save Leipzig. These included redeveloping both the downtown and historical areas and attracting more modern businesses. As a result, since 2010, Leipzig has been described by the German media as being a cool, trendy urban space with a relatively high quality of life.
- G. ____ As a visitor, one of the must-go places in the city is Augustusplatz, a busy square which is located on the eastern side of the historical area. Augustusplatz offers you the chance to view a number of buildings that were built across the decades of the 20th century, from the Opera House to the quietly exceptional concert hall Gewandhaus and the Panorama Tower. The tower, which is part of the university, gives you a magnificent view of the whole city. One bonus to the square is that it is useful as a base for your trip because from there, you can find trams that will take you to every corner of the city.
- H. ____ Eastern Germany may not grab your attention like the extremely popular sites of the west, but should you want to discover unknown places and find little secrets all for yourself then you should certainly give it a go.
