

Reading Exercise > Heroism Outshining Crimes

Winnie Madikizela-Mandela became a potent symbol of South Africa's anti-apartheid struggle when she was banished and jailed for campaigning for the rights of black South Africans and her husband's release.

For decades she and her then-husband, the iconic Nelson Mandela, were the country's most famous political couple - but Mr. Mandela divorced her in 1996. After their separation she kept his surname and they maintained ties, leading to critics accusing her of attempting to use his name for political mileage. In later life her reputation became tainted by a fraud conviction and murder accusations, which she denied.

Born in Bizana in Cape Province in 1936, she met Mr. Mandela in 1957. He was married at the time to Evelyn Mase, but the marriage was breaking up. The next year they married – she was a young bride, 16 years his junior, glamorous and strong-willed. However, they were destined to have little time together as political activism and a period in hiding kept Mr. Mandela apart from her. He was jailed for life in 1964 and only released in 1990. While he was in prison, she took on an increasingly political role, partly because of constant harassment by the South African security police. She became an international symbol of resistance to apartheid and a rallying point for poor, black township residents who demanded their freedom.

'Mother of the Nation'

Her resistance to harassment and championing of the anti-apartheid cause led to periods of imprisonment from 1969, much of it spent in solitary confinement. In 1976, the year of the Soweto riots, she was banished from the township to a remote rural area. At one stage her house was burned down, with suspicion falling on the South African security forces.

This led to her being dubbed the 'Mother of the Nation'.

By the mid-1980s and the start of a long period of township militancy against the white government of President P W Botha, she was back in Soweto and at the heart of the struggle. Her image and activism drew to her many anti-apartheid activists, including a group of young men who became her personal bodyguards. They became known as the Mandela United Football Club. Her prominence led to great influence over young, radical township activists but also growing controversy.

As activists turned on suspected police informers or collaborators, the use of rubber tires filled with petrol as brutal murder weapons, known as "necklaces", became widespread. At one rally she controversially seemed to endorse their use. Even greater controversy came when she was accused by senior anti-apartheid activists of involvement in the killing of a 14-year-old township militant, Stompie Seipei.

Disgrace and divorce

Stompie had been seized by Ms. Madikizela-Mandela's bodyguards in 1989 and was later found dead. Members of the ANC leadership accused her of being behind the killing and of conducting a virtual reign of terror in parts of Soweto.

From prison, Mr. Mandela continued to support his wife. In 1991, after his release, she was charged with the assault and kidnapping of Stompie and one of her bodyguards was charged with his murder. She denied the allegations but was found guilty of kidnapping and sentenced to six years imprisonment. However, this was reduced to a fine by an appeal court.

Her marriage to Mr. Mandela broke down in the years after his release, and they were

Text taken from <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-23357267>

Authored by Andrés Barón-Ávila

MA Education and Technology – UCL – IOE

divorced in 1996. President Mandela accused her of adultery, and in the same year, dismissed her as deputy minister of arts and culture –the only post she has held in government since white minority rule ended. Her split from Mr. Mandela did little to harm her political standing among poor, black South Africans who saw her as their voice at a time when the ANC had adopted pro-business policies. But at the same time, she became known for an increasingly lavish lifestyle, arriving to testify at Truth and Reconciliation Commission hearings in a white Mercedes limousine surrounded by bodyguards.

In 2003, Mrs. Madikizela-Mandela suffered another blow when a court convicted her of fraud and theft in connection with a bank loan scandal. The sentencing magistrate compared her to a modern-day Robin Hood, fraudulently acquiring loans for people who were desperately short of money, but he said that as a prominent public figure she should have known better. An appeal judge overturned the conviction for theft, but upheld the one for fraud, handing her a three-year-and-six-month suspended sentence. This dented her career, but she remained respected in the ANC, and was an MP until her death.

At the ANC conference in 2007, she was elected to the party's top decision-making body, the National Executive Committee, and in the 2009 general election, she was placed fifth on the list of ANC MPs nominated for parliament, in a clear sign that then-President Jacob Zuma saw her as an electoral asset. She would later clash with him and become political patron of the youth leader Julius Malema.

Final years

Ms. Madikizela-Mandela described being there for the final moments of her ex-husband's life in 2013 and appeared in a prominent position at memorial services in his honor. After his death, she became embroiled in a legal battle over his village home, which she wanted for their two daughters, Zinzi and Zenani. The Supreme Court affirmed a decision that she held no claim to it in January 2018. The same month she was honored with an honorary degree from Makerere University in Uganda for her anti-apartheid campaigning.

Although she remained in the political limelight, she was granted leave from parliament in March 2018 due to ill health. A family spokesman confirmed her death on 2 April, aged 81. Her family said she had suffered from a 'long illness' and had been in and out of hospital in the last months of her life. 'She succumbed peacefully in the early hours of Monday afternoon surrounded by her family and loved ones,' spokesman Victor Dlamini said in a statement.

Context Clues > Read the text and find the word in bold that fits best each definition.

Definition	Word
aggressive pressure or intimidation	1.
the focus of public attention	2.
a forceful or violent effort to get free of restraint	3.
potential benefit or use to be derived from a situation	4.

Definition	Word
removed from employment or office	5.
had an adverse effect on; diminished	6.
took hold of suddenly and forcibly	7.
sent away from a place as an official punishment	8.

Text taken from <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-africa-23357267>
 Authored by Andrés Barón-Ávila
 MA Education and Technology – UCL – IOE

Finding Factual Information > Complete the chart using the information from the text.

Year	Event
(9) _____	Winnie and Nelson got married.
(10) _____	Nelson was given a life sentence.
(11) _____	Violent disturbances made Winnie flee.
1989	(12) _____
1990	(13) _____
1991	(14) _____
(15) _____	Nelson divorced Winnie.
(16) _____	Winnie was found guilty of fraud and theft.
(17) _____	Winnie was nominated for member of the parliament.
2013	(18) _____

Distinguishing Facts > Decide if the statements below are true (T), false (F) or not given (NG).

19. Winnie Madikizela-Mandela was tortured during her periods of imprisonment. _____
20. She disagreed with the use of weapons like 'necklaces' by the activists. _____
21. Her political allies made accusations about her role in Stompie's murder. _____
22. Winnie's political influence weakened when Nelson Mandela divorced her. _____
23. Winnie's net worth decreased after her conviction for fraud and theft. _____
24. Victor Dlamini was the doctor who took care of Winnie in her last days. _____
25. The title of Mother of the Nation was given to her after she was back in Soweto. _____
26. Winnie took part in Nelson's cabinet during his presidency. _____

