

Exercise 4

Read the information. Then listen to extracts from the conversation again.

Complete the extracts with the words you hear.

In table-completion tasks, you might hear people contrasting different information. It's important to recognise when and how speakers do this, so you can choose the information you really need.

1. Caller: Hello. You deliver meals to people's homes, right? My friend recommended you.

Employee: Well, _____. You place your order online for the meals you want, and then we provide everything you need to make them

2. Caller: OK. When do you deliver the meals?

Employee: How it works is that you order online by Wednesday, then early on a Friday, our delivery truck will come to your home. We do it on a Friday, _____ a Monday, so you get fresher ingredients on the weekends.

3. Employee: Sometimes we include bread, but not always, and sometimes we offer different desserts. _____, what we never do without is some kind of fruit.

4. Employee: And for teenagers, we try to get them involved in cooking, so for every meal, we put together a simple recipe. So you have everything you need, _____ cooking equipment, which we assume you already have.

5. Caller: So, in terms of cost, my friend told me she was paying £192.75 each week.

Employee: That's what it is, yes. It _____ £219.50, _____ we found some different suppliers, and so we were able to reduce the price by £26.75.

play.MP3

6. Caller: Wow, that would certainly make dinnertime less boring, _____ I suspect my children might find it rather spicy, and wouldn't eat it. Aren't these meals more expensive?
--	--