Maya is calling up Dita on her cell.

Maya	:	Hello, may I speak to Dita?
Dita	:	Yes, it's me. Who's speaking?
Maya	:	Hi, Dita. It's Maya. Are you occupied at the moment?
Dita	:	Well, yeah, I'm in the middle of something. I'm chopping up some meat and vegetables now.
Maya	:	What are you cooking? I never knew that you can cook.
Dita	:	I'm making beef soup. My big sis is helping me, though. I'm still learning how to cook. Why are you calling me, Maya?
Maya	:	Oh, well, I'm working on our Science project report. I'm having trouble making a conclusion. Can you help me, please?
Dita	:	Sure. Just email it to me. I'll write the conclusion.
Maya	:	It's coming your way right now. Thanks, Dita.
Dita	:	No problem. That's what we call teamwork.
Maya	:	I'm hanging up now. See you in class tomorrow!
Dita	:	Bye, Maya.

The following text is for numbers 14 to 17.

Last summer, my family and I spent our holiday in Rome, Italy. We arrived at Rome-Fiumicino International Airport at 9 a.m. Then, we headed to the hotel and took a rest for a while. In the afternoon, we started our journey by visiting the Colosseum, a giant amphitheater built during Roman Empire. After that, we went to the Roman Forum on foot and saw the ruins of ancient public temples before we headed to the Palatine Hill.

On the second day, we visited the Trevi Fountain and I even tossed a coin there. It is believed that if we stand with our back to the fountain and toss a coin over our left shoulder, we will return to Rome someday. We had lunch at an outdoor restaurant in Piazza Navona while enjoying the magnificent view of the square. Across the street, a couple was seen busking with people surrounding them. The woman was singing while the man was playing a guitar.

We spent our last day in Vatican City. In the early morning, we took a bus ride to the Vatican Museum. The museum displays a lot of art collections where Sistine Chapel is located at the very end of it. Finally, we visited Saint Peter's Basilica, the largest church in the world. After taking plenty of pictures inside, we went back to the hotel. Spending holiday in Rome with my family was an experience I could never forget in my life.

The following text is for numbers 18 to 20.

Last year, we had a camping for the first time. When I was about to sleep, I realized my sleeping bag was missing. Few hours before, I remembered putting it next to my backpack in the far corner of the tent. I tried looking around the tent yet I found nothing. My friends were busy around the campfire so I went alone to borrow a sleeping bag from the front desk at the camping site.

After I got the sleeping bag, I walked through the footpath, suddenly my flashlight flickered and went off as it ran out of battery. The footpath was getting unclear due to the dim light but I tried to keep my pace steady. Out of nowhere, I felt a cold breeze and saw something crossing the dark woods. I didn't think twice. I ran back as fast as I could. I slipped and fell into a muddy field. My clothes got dirty and the sleeping bag was tossed somewhere. I began tearing up because I was alone and scared. I heard two boys talking so I screamed asking for a help. Fortunately, they heard my voice and helped me up. They even sent me back to my tent.

Two weeks later, the house next door was filled with cheerful laugh after being empty for months. Turned out, the boys helping me in the woods moved in with their family. I was glad to see them again to pay back their kindness for helping me.

18. What is the main idea of the first paragraph?
    A. The writer could not find her sleeping bag in the tent.
    B. The writer forgot to bring her sleeping bag to the campsite.
    C. The writer looked for her sleeping bag around the campfire.
    D. The writer moved her sleeping bag after setting up the tent.

19. The writer could get back to the tent safely ....
    A. after running as fast as she could
    B. after getting helped from the boys
    C. by following the footpath that she saw
    D. by keeping her steady pace in the woods

20. Why did the writer feel happy to see the boys again? Because ....
    A. they had helped her before
    B. they moved in next to her house
    C. she wanted to show her gratitude
    D. she wanted to keep in touch with the boys
