- Create a set of instructions for making a sandwich that is clear and easy to follow.

HOW TO MAKE SENTENCES WITH THE FIRST CONDITIONAL:

The first conditional is formed by combining two clauses: an if-clause and a result clause. The if-clause expresses the condition, while the result clause expresses the consequence. The structure of the first conditional is as follows:

If + subject + present tense, subject + will + base form of the verb

Example: If it rains, we will stay at home.

In this example, "if it rains" is the condition, and "we will stay at home" is the consequence.

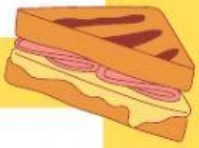
IT IS DISCUSSION TIME

Part 1: You are planning a picnic with a friend and you want to eat a sandwich, but you are not sure what ingredients you have available at home. Use the first conditional to talk about what other kind of ingredients you could use to make the sandwich if the ingredients you want are not available. Make sure to write down the whole list of ingredients you came up with.

Part 2: Once you complete the discussion, fill in the following blank spaces with the list of ingredients you wrote..



FILL THE BLANKS

- If we don't have ham, we can use _____ or _____.
- If we don't have mayonnaise, we can use _____.
- If we don't have tomatoes, we can use _____.
- If we run out of cheese, we can use _____ instead.
- If we don't have _____, we can use spinach as a substitute.

Read the following story with your partner and create five sentences using the first conditional to explain what the person will do in the following scenario.

If we don't have the ingredients for a sandwich at home, we could go to the grocery store and buy some bread, cheese, and ham to make a classic ham and cheese sandwich. Alternatively, if we have some leftover chicken or tuna, we could mix it with mayonnaise, celery, and onion to make a chicken or tuna salad sandwich. We could also use avocado, tomato, and lettuce to make a vegetarian sandwich, or use peanut butter and jelly to make a sweet and savory sandwich. There are so many options, we just need to decide what we're in the mood for!

Step 2:

After completing the script for the conversation between the two friends, take the time to practice reading it out loud with your partner. It's important to take turns playing each role in the conversation, so both partners have the chance to practice their speaking skills.
