Kicking the stress away!

Chelwood School, one of inner-city London's largest schools, had a big problem with bullying until last year. 'We'd tried everything, but nothing worked.' says head teacher Miriam Webster. 'I was surprised when youth worker Fred Adams suggested martial arts. However, I thought if we didn't try it, we would never know if it could be successful.'

All bullies now have to attend the afterschool programme. 'We know that children become bullies because they are stressed.' says Fred. 'Most of them are worried about bad grades and deadlines at school, and have money problems and bad relationships at home.'

'At first the training is very hard, and they wish they weren't in the programme,' he says. 'But then, they see how jujitsu and karate can help them to manage their stress, and stop getting upset by life. It makes them better students, and more confident people.' As a result of the programme, bullying at Chelwood has reduced by over 90%.
