A month without plastic

13-year-old Hannah Schumann describes her family's plastic-free month

Six weeks ago, the teacher in our geography lesson told us to find out facts about the sea. So I went home and read a book about the world's seas. Then I went online and saw a video about how the sea is full of plastic that people have thrown away, and this made me very worried about the problem.

I told my mum, dad and sister Megan that people should use less plastic. Dad said it was impossible, but Megan didn't agree. She said we should spend a month without buying anything plastic. Mum thought it was a good idea too, so that's how our 'plastic-free' month began!

We stopped buying fruit in plastic boxes and bread in plastic bags. But some stuff, like medicine, is only sold in plastic bottles. Sometimes we needed to buy things like that but those were the only times we broke our 'no plastic' rule.

Finding things without plastic was harder than we thought. We had to go to expensive shops once or twice, but we actually saved money because we cooked all our own meals instead of buying fast food. I thought the month would be strange, but in fact it felt normal after a few days.

Now that it's finished, I've agreed to give a talk about our 'plastic-free' month to my whole school. When I've done that, I'm going to put my opinions in a blog so that even more young people can find out about this important subject.
