Prizes for school sport

You're on the school team. You're not the star player, but you usually try to come to practice sessions, and play in matches when you can. Do you deserve a prize?

If the decision was up to sports teacher Mary Brock, the answer would probably be no. Mary says although a player doesn't have to be the best to get a prize, those who receive one should really have to work hard for it. She suggests prizes for the most improved player, or the one who gets the team working together, as well as the most talented. 'A prize has to stand for something,' says Mary. 'If you give one to everyone, it has no value.' She argues that giving prizes for particular reasons, such as improving, teaches kids that adults value hard work and trying your best.

However, others have no problem with giving prizes to all those who play. 'We're trying to encourage kids to take part in sports,' says Paul Delton, a professional sports coach. 'A prize is one way to do that. When we give prizes only to the best players, or even when we include the most improved players, we are teaching kids the wrong lesson – sending the message that doing well is everything, when in fact it's only part of what's important.'

'Playing sports also teaches kids about teamwork and the importance of exercise,' Paul continues. 'There'll be plenty of opportunity for them to learn about competition as they get older. They'll soon realise that only one team wins the soccer World Cup and only one person wins the 100-metres race.'

I think I agree with Paul Delton. While kids are still at school, there's nothing wrong with letting everyone who plays a sport feel like a winner!

41 What is the writer doing in this text?

- A explaining how school sports teams are run
- B asking why some children don't like school sport
- C considering both sides of an argument about school sport
- D complaining about school sport being harder for particular children

[1]

42 What does Mary Brock say about school sports prizes?

- A Prizes which are given to everyone are worth little.
- B The best players do not need to get prizes.
- C Prizes can cause arguments between children.
- D She prefers not to give prizes if possible.

[1]

43 Paul Delton believes that giving a prize to everyone in the team

- A can help the players improve their results.
- B shows that winning and losing do not matter.
- C is a way of showing children that sport is fair.
- D helps to get more children interested in sport.

[1]

44 Paul Delton mentions some famous sporting events as examples of

- A people working in a team.
- B how real competitions work.
- C how sport should be organised in schools.
- D what children should aim for in sport.

[1]

45 What would the writer say to Mary Brock?

A

'I know you agree with Paul about the fact that sport encourages children to work together. He gives prizes for that too.'

B

'Some children will never be the best or the most improved – if they never get a prize, they'll start to dislike sport.'

C

'You and Paul are not so different. You both only give prizes to children who do their best every time they play.'

D

'I agree with what you say about giving prizes – it's important to show that those who work hardest will achieve the most.'
