LEVEL 2 –TEST UNIT 1

Reading

7 Read the text and choose the correct options.

Old age is a chance to enjoy some well-earned free time and relaxation- but these days there are often new duties as well as new pleasures. More and more grandparents are taking the role of parents for their grandchildren. In the US, for example, surveys have recently shown that about 4,7 million children live with their grandparents, and millions more grandparents are looking after grandchildren without actually living with them. The same thing is happening in Britain.

In the past, it was normal for family members to live near each other. For example, records show that in London in the 1950s most people had a lot of relatives living locally – children were surrounded by caring aunts, uncles, cousins, and grandparents.

These days, people live longer and so there are more grandparents around. At the same time, divorce has become more common so there are more single parents, and, above all, more children who are unhappy because their parents have broken up. Grandparents often take over in difficult times, sometimes permanently.

It is not always easy for grandparents. They do not have as much energy as when they were younger. But most of them seem to enjoy it, and they often play an important role in keeping families together. One grandmother says: "Whatever price I've had to pay, it's been worth it – and my grandchildren have kept me young!"
