The man who climbed Everest

These days, climbing up to the top of Mount Everest, the world's highest mountain, has become so popular that it is often crowded with teams of climbers. Fifty years ago, only a few people had reached its summit. Nowadays, more than a hundred people a year do the climb up Mount Everest. However, in 2006, one of the many people who reached the top was different. His name was Mark Inglis, he came from New Zealand, and his successful climb was unusual because Mark doesn't have any legs.

If you know anything about the history of climbing Mount Everest, you'll know that Mark wasn't the first New Zealander to reach the summit. In 1953, Edmund Hillary was not only the first New Zealander to climb the world's highest mountain, but also one of the first two men on earth to do so. He reached the summit along with his climbing partner, a Nepalese mountain climber called Tenzing Norgay. However, Mark's achievement was a first for someone with his disability. Other disabled climbers, including a blind American man and a Nepalese man with no hands, had succeeded in climbing Everest before Mark, but what Mark managed to do was perhaps more incredible. He wore artificial legs during the climb, which had been made especially for him, but the strength and effort he needed to achieve his goal was amazing.

After the climb, Mark told reporters that he had decided to go up Everest because he was a mountain climber and had always dreamed of climbing Everest, and not because he wanted to set records as a disabled person. He had lost his legs when he was in his twenties. At the time, he was working as a mountain rescue worker and during a climb, bad weather meant that he and a friend had to find shelter in an ice cave. When they were rescued, two weeks later, their legs had frozen and doctors had had to cut them off. Despite this personal disaster, Mark continued to love climbing, and never stopped dreaming about reaching the top of Everest one day.

As well as achieving a personal goal, Mark climbed Everest to raise money to help other people. On his website, he says that you don't see many disabled people in Tibet, one of the countries where Mount Everest is situated, because life is hard there, and there is very little support for people with disabilities. By raising money, he hoped to be able to provide artificial arms and legs for disabled Tibetan people, as well as for people who had lost arms and legs in other poor countries, such as Cambodia. Mark's successful climb was both an important personal achievement and an act that helped give other people hope and support.

Chasing dreams

Johnny Hunt <sup>1</sup> _____ at six every day. He showers, gets dressed, has a quick snack and by seven he's already on the tennis court hitting one ball after another. He then spends six hours at school and after all his lessons, he rushes back onto the court for more practice. Today is slightly different because before he had his morning tennis lesson, he <sup>2</sup> _____ 10 kilometres. Johnny <sup>3</sup> _____ in a big tournament at the weekend, so he needs <sup>4</sup> _____ much harder. But Johnny hates all of this. So why does he do it? Well, Johnny has 'pushy parents'.

'Pushy parents' think that if they <sup>5</sup> _____ young again, they <sup>6</sup> _____ things differently. But because they can't go back to how things <sup>7</sup> _____, they want their own children to fulfil their failed dreams and ambitions. They see their children as an extension of themselves, sometimes not realizing how unhappy they are. Unsurprisingly, a recent study <sup>8</sup> _____ that the majority of parents who didn't manage to achieve their own dreams, want their children to succeed in those things. But <sup>9</sup> _____ problem with this is that these children lose their autonomy and never have their own dreams.

Back on the court, Johnny misses the last shot and loses the match. 'If he <sup>10</sup> _____ a bit more, he <sup>11</sup> _____ a champion,' says his dad. But Johnny knows that this <sup>12</sup> _____ the case ...
