Once upon a time, a boy named Jason was raised by Chiron the wise centaur. Jason was the rightful heir of a distant land, and once he came of age, he was destined to reclaim his throne from his uncle Pelias, who had stolen it.

The centaur raised Jason well, teaching Jason all these stories and lessons he knew about the world. Once Jason was old enough, he said goodbye to Chiron, and set off on his journey to claim his throne.

On his way, Jason came to a raging river. Standing on the shore of the river was an old woman.

“Young man, you look big and strong,” said the old woman.

“Could you help me across the river? I’m much too weak to cross on my own.”

“Of course!” answered Jason.

Jason carried the old woman on his back across the river. She was much heavier than she looked! Along the way, Jason stumbled, and lost one of his sandals.

Unbeknown to Jason, the old woman was really the goddess Hera. She wanted to make sure that Jason was a true and kind hero. Jason had proven himself ready!

Jason continued on his way, and soon arrived before King Pelias. A long time ago, King Pelius had been warned to beware of a man wearing one sandal. And so, the King was shocked to see Jason with only one sandal!

Scared, and not wanting to give up his throne, King Pelias publicly challenged Jason to prove himself worthy.

“To claim your throne, you must return the Golden Fleece,” announced the King, knowing that this was an impossible task.
