

Five Mysterious and Secret Spots to Discover in London

London is full of secret 1 which, although often in plain sight, can reveal a whole load of mystery and history associated with them. For this post we invited 2, a guest blogger to write about a few of her favourite spots...

Have you ever been to London? Regardless of what your answer is, I am sure there is the hidden London that will appear surprising to you and mysterious undiscovered attractions not included in any guidebooks.

There are astonishing underground secret places in 3 that tourists rarely ever visit and here are just a few:

Aldwych station, 171 Strand, London

Closed tube stations always draw 4, they seem to be full of mysteries and inhabited by phantoms. Aldwych station located in the City of Westminster in Central London, is believed to be full of 5. It is interesting to know that this station was opened in 1907, but was closed because 6 and it was not cost-effective to use it. Parts of the station and the tunnels were used during the two world wars as a temporary hideaway for objects from London's art galleries and museums. The station also appears in a number of films such as Creep, V for Vendetta, Woman in Black II, Sherlock, Mr. Selfridge and The Krays. Visitors can get access to explore the station several times a year, and it is also possible to hire the station for some events. Nonetheless, you can have a look at the entrance.

why? Who?
what? What?
where? Where?
whose? Whose?

1

2

3

4

5

6

❖ Now, match the question words with the answers.

Use numbers.

ghosts

Crystal Roman

London

people's attention

the amount of passengers was too low spots