Mary Richards was my great-grandmother, my mum's grandmother. I never knew her, but Mum says she was a very special person. Mary was born in a small town in England in 1914. She was a clever girl, and she wanted to be a doctor, but girls hardly ever went to university in those days. Mary's family were poor, so Mary left school when she was only 14 to find a job in the kitchen of a big London restaurant.

One day, a young man called Larry came to the restaurant. He saw Mary and they fell in love. But they were both very poor and very young, so they didn't get married for a long time.

Finally, in 1935, Larry and Mary got married. Two years later, they had a baby girl, my grandmother, and then they had another baby, a little boy this time. Larry worked hard to make money for his family, and after the Second World War he and his family lived in a big house with servants. And that's when Mary said to him one day: 'Larry, I want to go back to school, and then I want to go to university.'

Mary was 33 years old, but she went to night school and studied hard. She had excellent marks, and so she went to university and became a doctor. She retired in 1980 and died in 1989, ten years before I was born.
