1- PRESENT PERFECT SIMPLE AND PRESENT PERFECT CONTINUOUS

Q1. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   I've worked in the garden all day and now I'm tired.

○   I've been working in the garden all day and now I'm tired.

Q2. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   What have you done? You're all wet.

○   What have you been doing? You're all wet.

Q3. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   I've finished my homework. Now I'm going to watch TV.

○   I've been finishing my homework. Now I'm going to watch TV.

Q4. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   What have you done with my keys? - I haven't seen your keys.

○   What have you been doing with my keys? - I haven't seen your keys.

Q5. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   She's worked in the garden all morning and she's still not finished.

○   She's been working in the garden all morning and she's still not finished.

Q6. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   Why are you sweating? - I've cut the grass.

○   Why are you sweating? - I've been cutting the grass.

Q7. Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

○   How many biscuits have you eaten?

○   How many biscuits have you been eating?

Q8.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   How long have you known her?

   ○   How long have you been knowing her?

Q9.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   I've had this computer for over 10 years.

   ○   I've been having this computer for over 10 years.

Q10.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   I've had piano lessons for over 10 years and I'm still not very good.

   ○   I've been having piano lessons for over 10 years and I'm still not very good.

Q11.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   How long has he seen her? - Not long, but they're getting married next month.

   ○   How long has he been seeing her? - Not long, but they're getting married next month.

Q12.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   I have cooked for the last two hours and now you tell me you're not hungry!

   ○   I have been cooking for the last two hours and now you tell me you're not hungry!

Q13.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   He's put on a lot of weight since he came to Germany.

   ○   He's been putting on a lot of weight since he came to Germany.

Q14.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

   ○   Why are you crying? - I've cut onions.

   ○   Why are you crying? - I've been cutting onions.

Q15.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

    ⊙   Has the film started yet?

    ⊙   Has the film been starting yet?

Q16.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

    ⊙   They have built the new road around the school for more than a year.

    ⊙   They have been building the new road around the school for more than a year.

Q17.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

    ⊙   Teacher to student: Have you done your homework?

    ⊙   Teacher to student: Have you been doing your homework?

Q18.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

    ⊙   Someone has taken my dictionary!

    ⊙   Someone has been taking my dictionary!

Q19.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

    ⊙   Has John told you about the party next week? - No, I haven't seen him today.

    ⊙   Has John been telling you about the party next week? - No, I haven't seen him today.

Q20.   Which of the two sentences below is the better or more likely?

    ⊙   Has John told you about the party next week? - No, we were talking about last weekend.
               *

    ⊙   Has John been telling you about the party next week? - No, we were talking about last weekend.