Discourse Markers

Discourse markers are words or phrases that are used to connect, organize, and manage sentences and paragraphs.

Discourse markers have many functions. They can be used at the start, middle, or end of sentences and paragraphs. However, they are often used as sentence starters to link ideas and create fluency. Here are some examples for different functions.

To add information and – too – also – moreover – in addition – furthermore Negotiators face situations, and to do well in them they need to understand how they work.	To sequence events first – second – third – next – after – later – then First, negotiators face some independent situations.
To show similarities similarly – in the same way – likewise – equally Some negotiators have a strong power on other people. Also, they are able to achieve more of their goals.	To contrast however – although – but – alternatively – on the other hand It is always possible to respond to a hardball tactic with one of your own. Although this response can result in chaos.
To emphasize especially – clearly – particularly – above all – frequently Frequently, in order not to be embarrassed by asking “obvious” questions, the customer will simply nod his or her head and passively agree with the other party’s analysis or statements.	To show cause and effect because – hence – therefore – consequently – as a result Therefore, when influencing the other’s viewpoint, you must also deal with the other party’s understanding of your value for a particular outcome,
To conclude in summary – overall – to sum up – finally – in conclusion Finally, negotiators should listen carefully to the other party and identify consistent and inconsistent information.	To illustrate for example – including – for instance – such as – to illustrate For example, a man buying a car may claim that he must consult his wife before making a final decision.
