Discourse Markers

Discourse markers are words or phrases that are used to connect, organize, and manage sentences and paragraphs.

Discourse markers have many functions. They can be used at the start, middle, or end of sentences and paragraphs. However, they are often used as sentence starters to link ideas and create fluency. Here are some examples for different functions.

To add information and – too – also – moreover – in addition – furthermore	To sequence events first – second – third – next – after – later – then
Negotiators face situations, and to do well in them they need to understand how they work.	First , negotiators face some independent situations.
To show similarities similarly – in the same way – likewise – equally	To contrast however – although – but – alternatively – on the other hand
Some negotiators have a strong power on other people. Also , they are able to achieve more of their goals.	It is always possible to respond to a hardball tactic with one of your own. Although this response can result in chaos.
To emphasize especially – clearly – particularly – above all – frequently	To show cause and effect because – hence – therefore – consequently – as a result
Frequently , in order not to be embarrassed by asking “obvious” questions, the customer will simply nod his or her head and passively agree with the other party’s analysis or statements.	Therefore , when influencing the other’s viewpoint, you must also deal with the other party’s understanding of your value for a particular outcome,
To conclude in summary – overall – to sum up – finally – in conclusion	To illustrate for example – including – for instance – such as – to illustrate
Finally , negotiators should listen carefully to the other party and identify consistent and inconsistent information.	For example , a man buying a car may claim that he must consult his wife before making a final decision.
