Code of Ethics

The National Association of Realtors was founded in 1908 in the United States. This association formed and adopted the Code of Ethics in 1913 in its sixth annual convention. The code is unique in its vision; that is "the vision of those who dreamed that the business of real estate could become a profession, the vision of those who believed that the search for the highest and best use of the land required professionalism and responsibility [excerpted from the Preamble, Code of Ethics and Standards and Practice of the National Association of Realtors®].

The Code remains a living document, reflective of changes. It's reviewed, revised and updated annually at the national convention. It focuses on correct behavior amongst professionals as they serve their clients, the public and each other. It remains the model for real estate and contract-related laws in municipalities. For those who take it seriously and for its worth, the Code offers a clear map, a practical guide to a prosperous and free career in real estate.

The National Association of Realtors® requires members to take a class every four years in order to be informed with the new industry trends.
