Reading

Read the text and answer the questions that follow.

Travelling Readers

- I In today's world, the pace of life is very fast and people are often less likely to participate in activities that demand their undivided attention. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that fewer people are finding the time to read literature.
- II Advocates of reading claim that reading has important benefits for individuals and for society as a whole. They suggest that reading widens readers' vocabulary, leading to better communication skills. What is more, it increases world knowledge by exposing readers to different fields of interest and to different cultures. Finally, by allowing readers to access the thoughts and feelings of fictional characters, it improves their empathy and their ability to understand and work with others.
- III In recent years, there have been numerous attempts around the world to try to motivate people to read. In particular, a number of initiatives have tried to capitalise on the fact that there are many commuters and business travellers who spend a significant amount of time travelling.
- IV In Spain, for example, the Ferrocarrils de la Generalitat de Catalunya (Catalan Government Railways) put a specific barcode with links to the first chapters of popular novels on its trains. Commuters who had a smartphone with the barcode reader app could scan these barcodes and get free access to works of literature. The codes were put up as part of the Catalan Government's National Reading Plan, which aimed to encourage its citizens to read.
- V Australia's Qantas airline has also come up with a project to get its passengers reading. It has created a range of novels for its customers, selected to correspond with flight times. The programme is called "A Story For Every Journey" and provides passengers with a selection of books that are intended to match the length of their flight. The airline is hoping to attract passengers by offering these novels on its longer flights.
- VI It is still too early to tell whether any of these initiatives will succeed in influencing people's reading habits in any significant way. Yet, since reading has been shown to be a great way to reduce stress in addition to all its other benefits, it is certainly a pastime that is worth preserving, especially in today's world!

1 Choose the correct answer.
