Long, long ago, before the second world war, when Grandma was young, life used to be very different from what it is today. There was no television, no cell phones, and no computers, so children used to play outside much more than they do today. They used to climb trees, swim in rivers, and play games like hide-and-seek, catch-me-if-you-can, and many other exciting games. And, of course, they also used to read much more than the average child does today.
