Internet trade threatens exotic animals BNE:

The world's endangered species are _____ from yet another source, in addition to poachers, collectors wanting _____ rhino heads and Chinese medicine practitioners. Internet shoppers are creating a boom in the sale of _____ animals that represents another nail in the coffin for many creatures threatened with _____. This is according to a report compiled by the International Fund for Animal Welfare (IFAW). The report "Caught In The Web - Wildlife Trade On The Internet" found in "an _____ one-week Web search", 146 live _____, 5,527 elephant products, 526 turtle and tortoise shells,

2,630 reptile products and 239 wild cat products for sale. There were also _____ numbers of other products.

The report represents the tip of the _____. Experts estimate the _____ illegal global trade is worth billions of dollars a year. The World Wide Web _____ the situation. "Trade on the Internet is easy, cheap and anonymous. The result is a _____ black market where the future of the world's rarest animals is being traded away," said IFAW's Phyllis CampbellMcRae.

The report recommended tougher worldwide protection: "The current legal _____ and enforcement efforts are inadequate to deal with this _____ situation. A more effective response is essential." Ms. CampbellMcRae warned: "Trade in wildlife is _____ by consumer demand, so when the buying stops, the killing will too. Buying wildlife online is as _____ as killing it yourself."
