Last Monday, my classmates and I went to visit the National Museum of Natural History.

I was amazed with how many exhibits were there. The main attraction of the museum was a huge, reassembled skeleton of a T- Rex.

It had sharp, terrifying teeth, and with the way it was posed, it looked almost furious, as it was starving and about to eat you!

It made me realize how tiny and fragile humans are, compared to the prehistoric animals. Truly fascinating!

After spending the whole days walking around, we were starving as well. Learning can be exhausting sometimes!
