I. READING

Questions 1-5: Read the passage about teamwork and fill in each blank of the summary below with NO MORE THAN ONE WORD taken from the passage.

TEAM WORK

Meerkats live in the desert, with enemies everywhere. So how do they survive? They have all the skills to live there: they can hunt well, they can see their enemies from long distances. But they cannot survive alone. They survive because of one skill – they live and work together as a team. Meerkats are very good examples of the importance of teamwork. For them, teamwork is life or death.

Meerkats live underground in large groups and have different group roles. Some watch for enemies, others look after the young meerkats and others go hunting. Meerkats can't talk like humans, but they can communicate with each other using different sounds. They can tell the others where the enemies are – those eagles in the air flying towards them or some snakes on the ground.

So what can people learn about teamwork from these amazing animals? They show us the importance of communication and making decisions. Teams are small groups of people who work together, but have different skills. Teams usually make better decisions than one person alone. Because the team often has people with different skills, it has more ideas than one person. With more ideas, the group can choose the best answer to a problem.

But teamwork isn't always the best way to make decisions. It sometimes takes a long time to finalise the decisions, and, therefore, it usually needs good communication between members. But because everyone in the team can help with making decisions, people usually work hard and feel good to be a team.

TEAM WORK

Meerkats are excellent examples of how important (1)_____ is. Different meerkats take different roles to keep their group from enemies such as (2)_____ and (3)_____. Similarly, since members of a team have different (4)_____, they often propose more ways to solve a problem. However, team members should learn to communicate well with each other in order to save (5)_____ on making decisions.
