It all started when Jill was on vacation with friends in London. They were walking in a park when they heard many people laughing. They went near to see what was going on. There was a laughing competition. People were trying to win a prize for the funniest laugh – the kind of laugh that makes people around you laugh too.

Jill's friends said to her, "Go on, your laugh is very funny. When you laugh, it makes other people laugh!" So she joined the competition. Jill made many people laugh, and won! After that, Jill went to Italy, Canada and Japan to be in laughing competitions.

EMOJIS

Emoji comes from two Japanese words: e + moji.

'e', means picture and 'moji', means symbol.

From Lexis Online Dictionary

Emojis are simple, little pictures. People all over the world use them when they send short messages to each other online. The first emojis were invented in 1999, in Japan. The idea came from weather programs on television. These programs use symbols*, like a bright yellow sun or grey clouds, to show the weather. Emojis are also symbols, and people can use them to communicate many different feelings. It doesn't matter where you come from – Israel, England, Japan – everyone can understand the "emoji language".

Some language experts are worried about the future of written language. They worry because it is easier to send emojis than to write words. These experts think people will use emojis all the time, and stop writing complete sentences. As a result, correct spelling and good grammar may soon disappear.

However, other language experts think that emojis are useful. When you add emojis to messages, it is just like seeing the expressions on people's faces when they are talking. Emojis and facial expressions both add meaning to messages. Think of the following text messages: "I had a cheese sandwich for breakfast ☺" and "I had a cheese sandwich for breakfast ☹". They have very different meanings.

No matter what the experts think, more and more people are using emojis each year. These little symbols appear in millions of messages every day, all around the world. Clearly, they are here to stay.
