Funny Hiking Stories

I was just looking through some photos of past hikes and remembered some pretty funny moments. I'm sure everyone has one or two, here's a few of mine:

While ascending the Huntington Ravine trail last year, my wife and I came to one of the crossings of the Cutler River. It was flowing pretty well and we were both carrying pretty heavy packs, since we had planned to descent the Great Gulf trail and camp somewhere north of Spaulding Lake. My wife was a little nervous about the crossing and asked if I could stay close to steady her if she started to slip on the rocks. On either the first or second step I took, my foot started to slip off one of the nearly submerged rocks. Faced with either stepping directly into a foot and a half deep water or just leaping to the next rock and hoping for the best, I chose the latter (I guess I'm an eternal optimist). I made that rock, but my momentum wouldn't allow me to stop, so I leaped again, and again, and again. Within 2 seconds flat, I landed on the other side of the river, upright and completely dry! I turned around to see my wife just staring at me, mouth wide open. After we finished laughing, I left my pack and crossed back over to help her across. I still have no idea how I made it across, since I've been known to trip on totally flat pavement!

The following day, descending on Glen Boulder trail, it was starting to get late and the winds were gusting pretty well. There had been 75 to 80 mph winds at the summit, and the gusts sometimes threw us off balance on some of the rocky parts we needed to climb down. As the sun disappeared behind Boott Spur, I tried to hurry the pace. After a couple of occasions where I got a bit ahead of my wife, she asked me to stay closer so I could help her down some of the awkward spots. The very next scramble we get to, I hopped down, turned around to make sure she's ok and then continued on thinking she was right behind me. After about 30 to 35 feet, I looked back to see her still on the rocks, staring at me with a look on her face that said «what... did I... just... ask... ???». Yea, she didn't quite see the humor in that one, and my guilty laughter definitely didn't help.
